TURTON & SERCONE, OLE STEAM FOUNDAY, WOR WARE MITCH MURRILLES.

BY BY CHARLES DICKENS.

It is but a glimps of the world of fashion that It is but a glinops of the world of fashion that we want on this same miry afternoon. It is not so unlike the Court of Chancery, but that we may pass from the one scene to the other, as the crow dies. Both the world of fashion and the Court of Chancery are things of precedent and usage; ever-sheeping Rip Van Winkles, who have played at strange games through a deal of thundery weather; sheeping beauties, whom the Knight will wake one day, when all the stopped spits in the kitchen shall begin to turn prodigious.

It is not a large world. Relatively even to this world of ours, which has its limits too (as your Highness shall find when you have made ine tour of it, and are come to the brink of the void beyond, it is a very little speck. There is much good in it; there are many good and true people in it; it has its appointed place. But the evil of it is, that it is a world wrapped up in too much eweller's cotton and tine wood, and cannot hear the rishing of the large worlds, and cannot see them as they circle round the sun. It is a dead-med world, and its growth is sometimes unhealthy for want of air.

oned world, and he growth to her house in My Lady Dedlock has returned to her house in My Lady Dedlock has returned to her house in town for a few days previous to her departure tor Paris, where her ladyship intends to stay some weeks tafter which her movements are uncertain. The fishionable intelligence says so, for the confort of the Parisians, and it knows all fashionable things. To know things otherwise, were to be unfashionable. My Lady Dedlock has been down at what she calls, in fimiliar convertation, her "place" in Lincolnshire. The waters are out in Lincolnshire. An arch of the bridge in the park has been sapped and carried away. The adjacent low-lying ground, for half a mile in breadth, is a stagnant river, with melancholy trees to islands in it, and a surface punctured all over, all day long, with falling rain. My Lady Dedlock's "place" has been extremely dreary.—The weather, for many a day and night, has been so wet that the trees seem wet through, and the soft loppings and prunings of the woodman's are can make no crash or crackle as they fall. The deer, looking soaked, leave quagmires where they press. The shot of a tifle loses its sharpness in no moist air, and its smoke moves in a tandy little cloud toward the green rise, coppice topped, that makes a background for the falling 1110.—The view from my Lady Dedlock's bow windows is alternately a lead-colored view, and a view in Ladion Ink.

The vests on the stone terrace in the foreground

The vases on the stone terrace in the foreground catch the rain all day; and the heavy dropsfall, drip, drip, drip, the broad, flagged pavement, called, from old time, the Ghost's walk, all night.—On Sunday, the little church in the park is mouldy; the oaken pulpit breaks out into a cold sweat; and there is a general smell and taste as of the ancient Dedlocks in their graves. My Lady Dedlock (who is childless) looking out in the curly twilight from her boudoir at a keeper's lodge, and steing the light of a fire upon the latticed pares; and smoke arising from the chimney, and a child, chast d by a woman, numing out into the rain to meet the shining figure of a wrapped-up man coming through the gate, has been "bored to death."

Therefore my Ludy Dedlock has come away from the place in Lincolashire, and has left it to the rain, and the crows, and the rabbits, and the deer, and the partidges, and phoasants. The pictures of the Dedlocks part and gone have seemed to tanish into the damp walls in mere lowness of spirits, as the housekeeper has passed along the old atoms, shatting up the shutters. And when they will next covae forth again, the fashionable intelligence—which, like the fiend, is comiscient of the past and present, but not the future—cannot yet undertake to say.

Sir Leices-er Dedlock is only a baronet, but dian Ink. The vases on the stone termee in the foregroun of the past and present, but not the future—cannot yet undertake to say.

Sir Leice-ser Dedlock is only a baronet, but there is no mightier baronet than he. His family is as old as the hills, and infinitely more respectible. He has a general opinion that the world would be done up without Dedlocks. He would on the whole admit Nature to be a good idea (a little low, perhaps, when not inclosed with a parkience,) but an idea dependent for its execution on your great county families. He is a gentleman of strict conscience, diedainful of all littleness and meanness, and ready, on the shortest notice, to die any death you may please to mention, rather than give occasion for the least impresentment of his integrity. He is an honorable, obstinate, truthful, high-spirited, intenely prejudiced, perfectly unreasonable man.

Sir Lecicester is twenty years, full measure, feetly unreasonable man.

Sir Lecicester is twenty years, full measure, older than my Lady. He will never see sixty-tive again, nor perhaps sixty-six, nor yet sixty-seven. He has a twist of the gout now and then and walks n little stiffly. He is of a worlly presence, with his light gray hair and whisters, his fine shirt-full, his pure white waisteeat, and his blue coat with bright buttons always button-d. d. He is ceremonious, stately, most polite or every occasion to my Lady, and holds her persona attractions in the highest estimation. His gallant ye to my Lady, which has never changed since he counted her, is the one little—touch of romanticourted her, is the one little—touch or romanne sapey in him.

Indeed, he married her for love. A whisper still goes about, that she had not even family howbest. Sir Leicester has so much family that perhaps he had enough and could dispense with any more. But she had beauty, pride, ambition, in solent resolve, and sense enough to portion out a legion of fineladies. Wealth and station, added to these, soon floated her upward; and for years, now, my Lady Dedlock has been at the centre of the fashionable tree.

Fashionable tree.

How Alexander wept when he had no more worlds to conquer, every hedy knows—or has some reason to know by this time, the matter having been rather frequently mentioned. My Lady Dedlock, having conquered her world, fell, not into the melting, but rather into the freezing mood. An exhausted composure, a wotn out placidity, an equanimity of latigue not to be ruffled by interest, or satisfaction, are the trophics of her rectory. She is perfectly well bred. If she could be translated to Heaven to-morrow, she might be expected to ascend without any rapture:

She has beauty still, and, if it he not in its hore-

She has beauty still, and, it it be not in its hey day, it is not yet in its autumn. She has a fine face--originally of a character that would be rather Lace—originally of a character that would be rather alled very pretty than handsome, but improved nuto ela-siculty by the acquired expression of her tashionable state. Her figure is elegant, and has the effect of being tall. Not that she is so, but that" the most is made," as the Honorable Bob Stable has frequently asserted upon oath, " of all her points." The same authoraty observes, that she is perfectly got up; and remails, in commendation of her hair especially, that she is the best-groomed woman in the whole stad.

With all her perfections on her head, my Lady Deillock has come up from her place in Lincolnshite (hotly "pursued by the fishionable intelligence) to pass a few days at her house in town previous to her departure for Paris, where her ladyship intends to stay some weeks, after which her movements are uncertain. And at her house in town, upon this muddy, marky afternoon, presents himself an old gentleman, attorney-at-law, and town, upon this muddy, murky aucunous pro-himself an old gentleman, attorney-at-law, an eko solicitor of the High Court of Chancery, wh cke solicitor of the High Court of Chancery, who has the honor of ucting as legal adviser of the Dedlocks, and has as many cast-iron boxes in his office with the manes out-side, as if the present baronet were the coin of the conjuror's trick, and were constantly being juggled through the whole set. Across the hall, and up the stairs, and along the passages, and through the tooms, which are very brilliant in the season and very dismal out of it—Fairyland to visit, but a desert to live in—the old gentleman is conducted, by a Mercury in powder, to my Lady's presence.

The old contleman is reserved to look at but, is

The old gentleman is rusty to look at, but is reputed to have made good thrift out of aristocratic rearrings settlements and aristocratic wills and to be very rich. He is arrounded by a mysterious halo of family confidence; of which he is known to be the silent depository. There are noble Mausoleums rooted for centuries in retired glades of parks, among the growing timber and the tern, which perhaps hold fewer noble secrets The ferm, which porhaps hold fewer noble secrets than walk abroad among mon, shut up in the breast of Mr. Tulkinghorn. He is what is called the old school—a phase generally meaning any school that seems never to have been young—and wears knee breeches tied with ribbons, and gaitor or stocking. One peculiarity of his black clothes, and of his black stockings, be they silk or worsted, is, they never shine. Mute, close, irresponsive to any glancing light, his dress is like himself. He never converses when not professionally consulted. He is found sometimes speechles, but quite at home, at comes of dinner-tables in great country houses, and near doors of drawing-rooms, concerning which the fashionable intelligence is eloquent; where every body knows drawing-rooms, concerning which the fashionable intelligence is eloquent; where every body knows him, and where half the pecrage steps to say, "How do you do, Mr. Tulkinghorn?" He receives these calutations with gravity, and buries them along with the rest of his knowledge.

Sir Leierster Ded'ook is with my Lady, and is happy to see Mr. Tulkinghorn. There is an air of prescription about him which is always agreeable to Sir Leierster; he receives it as a kind of tribute. He likes Mr. Tulkinghoru's dress; there is a kind of tribute. It leierster; he receives it as a kind of tribute. It can the too. It is eminently respectable, and likewise, in a general way, retainlike. It expresses, as it were, the steward of the legal mysteries, the butler of the legal collections.

expresses, as it were, the steward of nysteries, the butler of the legal cellar the legal mysteries, the butler of the legal cellar to the Dedlocks.

Has Mr. Tulkingborn any idea of this himself? Max M. Tulkingborn any idea of this himself?
It may be so, or it may not but there is this remarkable circumstance to be noted in every thing associated with my Lady Dedlock as one of the leaders and representatives of a class—as one of the leaders and representatives of the full before the control of adjudication, should be refrest to the Wresonian excounted being quite out of the reach and keep in the part of of offinary morntal—seeing herself in her glass, where fulled being quite out of the representative of the buildings burst where fulled being quite out of the representative of the buildings burst where fulled being quite out of the representative of the buildings burst where fulled being quite out of the representative of the buildings burst where fulled being quite out of the representative of the buildings burst where fulled by the considered with my Lady Dedlock as one of the leaders and representative of the buildings burst where fulled being quite out of the representative of the buildings burst where fulled being quite out of the representative of the buildings burst was sometimed. There are deferential people, in a dozen callings, whom my Lady Dedlock suspects of nothing but prostration before her, who can tell you how to manago her as if she were a baby; who do nothing but nurse all their lives; who, humbly affecting to follow with profound subservience, lead her and her whole troop after them; who, in hooking one, hook all and bear them off, as Lemuel Golliver bore away the stately fleet of the majestic Lilliput. "If you want to address our people, sir," say Blaze and Sparkle the jewelers—meaning by our people, Lady Dedlock and the rest—"you must remember that you are not dealing with the general public; you must his our people is such a place." Therefore, while Mr. Tulkinghorn may not know what is passing in the Dedlock mind at present, it is very possible at present.

Mr. Tulkinghorn takes out his papers, asks permission to place them on a golden talisman of a table at my Ludy's cibow, puts on his spectacles, and begins to read by the light of a shaded amp.
"In Chancery, Between John Jaradyce-" My Lady interrupts, requesting him to miss as much of the formal horrors as he can.

Mr. Tulkinghorn glameces over his spectacles and begins lower down. My Lady carelessly and scornfully abstracts her attention. RUFUS KING & CO. FROM OUR N. Y. CORRESPONDENT.

New York, Monday, March 15, 1852. Heretofore March has been any thing but a Spring month-but, since yesterday, it promises better. A warm rain, with a heavy blow from the rivers, and has carried off the snow, and to-day, the sun shines with vernal softness and warnth. ever-growing West-which the Canals alone can take off. There has been a little piece of spite played off on some of the Pennsylvania public works, whereby goods from New York are pro-hibited from being forwarded on them. This severy possible at present.

"My Eady's cause has been again before the Chancellor, has it, Mr. Tulkinghorn!" says Sir Leicester, giving him his hand.

"Yes. It has been on again to-day," Mr. Tulkinghorn replies; making one of his quiet bows to my Lady who is on a sofa near the fire, shading her face with a hand-screen.

"It would be neders to ask," says my Lady, with the dreatiness of the place in Lincolnshite will upon her, "whether any thing has been done to-day," replies Mr. Tulkinghorn.

"Nor ever will be," says my Lady.

Sir Leicester has no objection to an interminable Chancery suit. It is a slow, expensive, British, constitutional kind of thing. To be sure, he has not a vital interest in the smit in question, her part in which was the only paperty my Lady brought him; and he bas a shadowy impression that for his name—the name of Dedlock—to be in a cause, and not in the title of that cause, is a most ridiculated of justice and a trifling amount of confusion, as a something, devised in conjunction with a waiety of other somethings, by the perfection of human wisdom, for the deternal settlement the mannel of the central settlement of the lower orders to rise up somewhere—like War Tyler.

"I say I am afraid," says Mr. Tulkinghorn who has tisen hastily, "that Lady Dedlock is ill."

"Mr. Tulkinghorn reads again. The heat is great and my letter began, has been changed into wintry sterms and frost. On Wednesday, we had the heavies full of snow of the year, preceded by rain, and accompanied by a gale from the North-East, that was really fearful. The snow, very wet and heavy, fell fast and thick; smashing with its weight some buildings—while the fierce blast up rooted trees and telegraph posts by the score, the ground having been proviously softened by rain. Their tour, thus fur, has been to the columns—we mean his share in the efforts made in 1812 and 1813 to secure to attailized Irishmen, the usages of war. Up to that time there was no precedent for retaliation upon the enemy, who refused to treat the naturalized as equal with the native American prisoner.

The National Zeitung, almost the only paper

Pressia, which holds up the standard of true de-

morracy, expresses its opinion upon our Maine liqnor have movement in the following words:-"There is a deep sensation in our country, car ed by the news from America. As we understand, they agitate for making laws against the selling of intoxicating liquors for the purpose of sheltering the people against that atrocious vice, "to get tipsy." It must create great sensation, to learn that this nation believes itself on so low a degree of civ ilization, that it must prohibit itself from intoxication by law. While we were gazing with admiration and fondness towards this great Republic, which is ahead of all the other nations as for industilous improvements and which is the home of those great principles, by which true human dignity is secured, we must feel sensation and amaze-ment to be told of such laws, so inconsistent with the high feelings of esteem we entertained towards this nation. Those laws may be fit for those wild nations, the Aborigines, but never for a civilized population, and they cannot be but injurious to the point of honor of the population of the U.S. Ag-

But this is not all. We, in Germany, are the most sinecia friends of this powerful Republic; we consider it as the great bulwark of liberty, as the standard bearer of the principles of true hunan dignity; we look at it as the model which our own German nation was to conform to for the ourpose of recovering its own liberty and dignity; out we, even we could not hear this news withou the deepest pain. Our hopes would be lost if was with dams, bridges and roads in Michigan this highly esteemed nation should degrade itself to such a point as to accept its laws from parties just as party zeal might want, or choose them .-Then we should fear that within the short space of seventy years would end the brilliant and rapid progress of that Republic; then we soon should witness parties and religious sects misusing the rights of association and trampling upon the absolute freedom of religious faith; then no party, nor sect, would content itself with quietly practising their own faith and their own customs, within their own limits, but they would assume to force their customs upon others," by legislating on such matters, for as well as Temperance men may interdict the use of intoxicating liquous and so destroy freedom of manufacturing, just as well any other party might forbid the sale of articles of luxury and so stop commerce; just as well one seet might forbid others to diess otherwise than they please; just as well all freedom might be annulled by law. And nobody would more enjoy these factions and their progress, then the foes of the Republic, who would be glad to extinguish in

A more distinguished soldier than Scott, America has not seen in her Colonial days, nor since her independence. A Captain of Artillery at 22, a distinguished Chief in three Campaigns at 26, a View Gangara the highest greate in the at 26, a Major-General, the highest grade in the United States Service, at 28, he has rendered in the almost furty years he held that position, sig-nal and various services to his country, in peace nal and various services to his country, in peace and war.

By bitth, General Scott belongs to Virginia (having been born at Petersburgh 13th June, 1750) and by ancestry to Scotland and the Celtic race. His immediate ancester fought with the English and Scottish Celts in the invasion of England, in 1745, and learned his tactics from our countryman, Sullivan, who marshalled the Pretender's army" from Glenfirsin to Culloden.

A medal commemorating the great events of Scott's life, would probably be inscribed with the following dates:

Mexican War—18466.

From these dates, one accustomed to clothe the dry bones of history with their appropriate deratils will see that the military career of this great man divides itself into campaigns against the British in Canada—against the Indians, and against Mexico. How wide is the field in which his laurels have been gathered! The carliest of them sprung up in the cold and hardy north, watered by the mists of Niagam—others were plucked by the thon fordless, bridgeless, and boatfless in the Third, on Sunday, were entered by burglars, but they were frightened off before securing any plunder mano hands.

of 1844, to a Mr. Reed of Philadelphia. In that letter he expressed the following rash opinion:

"I now hesitate between extending the period of testidence before naturalization, and a total repeal of all acts of Congress on the subject. My mind inclines to the latter."

We have reason to know that the General has since repented his "Reed letter." Indeed, a Biography of him just published contains as appeading an answer to some questions by that inconvenient interrogator of Whig notabilities, (Mr. W. E. Robinson) which openly recans the obnoxious declaration. He writes:

"In reply to your kind letter of the 8th inst., I take pleasure in saying that, grateful for the too partial estimate you place on my public services, you do me no more than justice in assuming that I entertain "kind and liberal views towards our naturalized citizens." Certainly, it would be impossible for me to recommend or support any measure intended to exclude them from a just and full participation in all civil and political rights now secured to them by our republican laws and institutions.

It is true, that in a season of unusual excite—stitutions. It is true, that in a season of unusual excite-Institutions.

It is true, that in a season of unusual excitement, some years ago, when both parties complained of iraudulent practices in the naturalization of foreigners, and when there seemed to be danger that native and adopted citizens would be permanently arrayed against each other in hos tile factions, I was inclined to concur in the opinion, then avowed by many leading statesmen, that some modification of the naturalization laws might be necessary in order to prevent abuses, allay strife, and restore harmony between the different classes of our people. But later experience and reflection have entirely removed this impression, and dissipated my apprehensions.

In my recent campaign in Mexico, a very large proportion of the men under my command were your country men, (Irish) Germans &c; I witnessed with admiration their zeal, fidelity, and valor in maintaining our flag in the face of every danger. Vicing with each other and our nativeborn soldiers in the same maks in patriotism, constancy, and heroic dareing, I was happy to call them brothers in the field, as I shall always be to salute them as countrymen at home."

tating laws of this kind are justly hable to the consumes and even to the various speers of other na-

This letter is dated Washington, May 26th, 1848, and no doubt contains the writer's latest opinions, on the subject of the naturalization of nigrants,

For the information of non-resulent contractors, it is proper to state that this road is intended to connect the city of Glagow, on the Missouri River, with the town of Huntaville, in Randolph Co.
